Letter

Dear stakeholder,

The unification of Shell's two parent companies, Royal Dutch Petroleum Company (Royal Dutch) and The "Shell" Transport and Trading Company, p.l.c. (Shell Transport) under a single company, Royal Dutch Shell plc, is a historic development that will reinforce our ability to deliver our strategy of more upstream and profitable downstream.

An important milestone towards the unification was achieved on 28 June, when the parent companies held their respective meetings of shareholders in The Hague and London at which the shareholders voted in favour of resolutions to approve the unification transaction. There are, however, a number of other conditions that must be satisfied before trading in Royal Dutch Shell plc shares can commence, including the acceptance by Royal Dutch shareholders of the offer for their shares and court approval of the Shell Transport scheme of arrangement. If all further conditions are fulfilled when expected, trading would begin on stock exchanges in London, Amsterdam and New York on 20 July 2005.

We believe the unification will strengthen Shell in a number of ways. It will provide a clearer and simpler structure with a single, smaller Board of Directors and a simplified management structure headed by a non-executive Chairman and a Chief Executive. The lines of accountability will be clearer, with an empowered Chief Executive leading the senior management team which reports to him. Also, the elimination of duplication and the centralisation and standardisation of functions in a single headquarters in The Hague will contribute to greater management efficiency.

We hope that over time that you will see these benefits in the strengthening of our continuing relationship.

I look forward to keeping you updated on our progress.

Yours etc,
